

TIPS FOR PLANNING YOUR EVENT

As you begin planning your organization's or group's involvement in National Prevention Week (NPW), you'll want to consider the many factors that will help you plan and host an effective event or activity. By clearly identifying the issues and topics your event will address, setting achievable goals and defining success up front, establishing a clear budget, determining the type and size of event you'll be hosting, and creating a realistic timeline, your organization or group will be able to execute a successful event that strengthens your relationship with the community and connects your efforts to a nationwide health observance. Here are some ideas on how to work with the daily themes of NPW, whom to include, when and where to conduct your event, and free or low-cost ways to get the word out.

NPW Dates and Themes

SAMHSA encourages communities, organizations, and individuals to participate in NPW during the observance's designated dates (May 10–16, 2020) to focus national attention on substance use prevention and promotion of mental health. National Prevention Week is an annual health observance dedicated to increasing public awareness of, and action around, mental and/or substance use disorders.

The daily themes of NPW highlight substance use and mental health issues that are essential to SAMHSA's work and priorities for the nation at-large. However, you are not required to align your NPW events or activities with these themes. Feel free to focus on areas of prevention that best suit you and your community. You also can hold events that encompass one or more of the themes.

Whom to Include

Once you know the goals of your event, deciding whom to include becomes a little easier. Consider partnering with other organizations to strengthen your event and maximize attendance. Additionally, if any members of your community can speak about the benefits of substance use prevention and mental health promotion, ask them to participate—event attendees may benefit greatly from personal stories or a motivational speaker. You can also check the NPW website to see other events that may be occurring in your geographic location and build connections in your community or state to increase participation in your event.

Where and When

The type of event you are holding and whom you choose to invite will help you determine the appropriate venue. Keep in mind how many people you are inviting and how many people you expect to actually attend. As you determine the date and time, be sure to note if other events are taking place at the same time that may compete with your event. If you want to host an indoor event, you can save costs by considering sites that are free to community organizations. If you are hosting your event outdoors, be sure to have an indoor backup location or rain date in case of inclement weather. Outdoor venues often require permits, so be sure to secure necessary permits in advance.

Tip: Consider talking to other local organizations that have hosted events to find out which venues they prefer and to get recommendations for vendor services.

Keeping Success and Outcomes in Mind

It may seem counterintuitive to think about the intended results of your event before you've even begun to plan it. However, deciding what a successful event looks like or what you want to achieve through your NPW event will help you determine the type of activity or event that best suits your needs. For example, your goals and measurable outcomes may be short- and long-term and include:

- Raising awareness of your organization, as measured by placement of media pieces about your NPW events or activities that will be seen by hundreds of people.
- Fundraising through independent donors and partners, as measured by donations.
- Increasing community awareness about ways to get involved in preventing substance use and mental illness through educational events, as measured by attendance, enrollment in community programs, and recruitment of volunteers.
- Reducing problem behaviors, as measured by the implementation of social hosting policies or other types of mental health or substance use legislation.
- Educating community members through the development of a new publication or product, as measured by distribution or downloads of the product.
- Expanding your organization's reach over time by collaborating with local partners on joint programming, as measured by total reach and attendance, number of events, and information from participant feedback surveys.

Determining your ultimate goals upfront will help your organization or group plan an event that achieves meaningful short- and long-term outcomes.

Budget

It's important that you align your goals with an event plan that meets your needs and fits within your budget.

As you're planning your event or activity, think about the power of in-kind support and volunteered time. When contacting local vendors and organizations with requests, consider offering to volunteer your time in return for a service or rental space for your event or activity. Your willingness to help clean a community center or plant flowers in a garden may inspire some kind of trade, such as a few hours of free time at a venue that would otherwise be beyond your budget.

Organizations with any budget can make a difference during NPW!
